

Reading Aloud

What is "Reading Aloud" and why is it important?

"Reading Aloud" to your child is one of the most important ways to help him become a good reader and enjoy reading.

How can I use "Reading Aloud" with my child?

"Reading Aloud" can be enjoyed by people of all ages. By listening to text, your child can not only enjoy a story or informational text or poetry, but he will also learn many valuable skills that will improve his reading.

"Reading Aloud" to young readers is particularly important because of the shared time together. Your child enjoys your company and sees that you value reading. By reading aloud from a variety of texts, you can expose your child to new concepts and vocabulary words that he would not encounter independently because his reading level limits the text he can read.

Exposure to new concepts and vocabulary builds a personal knowledge that will help your child understand information that he encounters in school. It is important to build your child's knowledge base because he will learn best by connecting new information to what he already knows.
