

Structured Language Experience Story “ai” #2

Dr. Craintrain wanted to explain why he thought the praiseworthy nurses should be nominated for sainthood. First of all, the nurses needed to maintain calmness with ailing people filled with pain. Does this gain them praise? No, just people plaintively complaining about their snail speed and how many hours they've been detained as they treat the nurses with disdain. Secondly, they remain faithful to their professionalism.

During one hour in ER, Nurse Quaintail painstakingly helped a new trainee with many patients. First, they helped Blaine who strained his back when he slipped on his sailboat in the rain. Then they helped Cain who sprained his ankle falling off the train. Next, they saw Mr. Nailer, the bailiff, who broke the main bone in his arm while restraining the flailing prisoner. Finally, they assisted Mrs. Wainscot who complained that her brain felt drained after she remained outside in a hailstorm.

After watching them, Dr. Craintrain gained respect for these saints. He was amazed that they could sustain their energy level after giving out painkillers and helping all these ailing people. Dr. Craintrain concluded, “The nurses’ care is like a paintbrush painting a rainbow of hope for our patients!”
