

Structured Language Experience Story “em” #1

The empress was upset about her dirty gems. The emperor remembered a past problem with a gremlin. The gremlin had used a chemical to clean the gemstones in December. The emperor sent a memorandum with the royal emblem to all members in the chemistry lab. The emperor didn't want any blemishes on the empress's gems.

The temperature rose in the lab as all of the chemists trembled in fear. But a semblance of calmness returned as they began their work and stirred the embers to heat the chemical cleaners. Rembrandt, the head chemist, confidently drank his lemonade. Then he cleaned the gemstones. They were perfect! The emperor proclaimed them the cleanest gems in the hemisphere!
