The best court jester, Lester, was filled with zestfulness as the festivities began. He was dressed in his best vest which had been a present from the royal messenger. Soon he would perform on the northwestern stage at the festival for King Nestle.

But first Lester stopped at the restaurant to eat sesame chicken. After eating, Lester's pressure began to grow as he became hesitant about performing for King Nestle. Then a royal guard gestured that it was time to head westward for the show.

Lester was never pessimistic, so his hesitancy began to lessen. On stage Lester kept the audience guessing and on their toes. When the court jester was done, King Nestle expressed his appreciation by giving him a present of a year's supply of chocolate.
