

Structured Language Experience Story “ob” #2

Bob Jacobson was an obstinate snob and didn't associate with anyone. He was oblivious to his neighbors. They had piles of corn cobs in their yard and kept ten large dogs. Obviously he wasn't an observer of their obnoxious behaviors or he might have had an idea about who they were. They were members of a mob who attempted to rob the local banks. They did this by trying to obstruct the lobby. They caused a problem using unusual obstacles, such as gobs of corncobs, to jam the doorknobs. They had their dogs slobber on the lobby floor to make it slippery. Of course, the mob became a big problem. Bob Jacobson finally began to observe their obstinate and obnoxious behaviors and eventually figured out who they were. Obviously, he did his job and got rid of the obnoxious mob and the piles of corn cobs.
