

Structured Language Experience Story “oke” #2

When my broker was having a sunstroke, I handed her a Coke so she could cool down. It fell out of her hand and broke when it hit the ground. She told me to throw her in the pool and she would do the backstroke. I could tell she wasn't joking. I stopped being a slowpoke and said, "Okeydoke." When she hit the water, it looked like smoke was coming off of her body. She began to choke on the water that was spilling into her mouth, because she was doing the breaststroke instead of the backstroke. I helped the broker out of the pool and told her to stay indoors, so that she wouldn't provoke another sunstroke.

