

Structured Language Experience Story “oo” #2

The girl scout troop was camping under the moonlight at the zoo. Their roomy tents were set up next to the droopy zookeeper’s hut. The troop’s focus was on earning a zoology badge. So, they had just listened to a zoologist explain why it would be foolhardy to get too close to a swooping vulture and other wild creatures.

They returned to camp and were in the mood for some food, when they heard a brooding sound. The troop couldn’t see well enough with just the moonbeam, so they grabbed a flashlight. Then they saw a moody raccoon caught under the zookeeper’s broom in a pool of water. Remembering what the zoologist had told the troop about not trying to soothe wild animals, they ran to get her. She helped the injured raccoon. So, the girls ran back to their tents to prepare their food for dinner. The troop earned their zoo badges for helping the raccoon.
