

Structured Language Experience Story “ound” #2

The Mound Builders didn't make a sound as they viewed their surroundings. They would build their round mounds from the ground up.

First, they found the boundaries which wound around the trees. Then the Mound Builders pounded the dirt until it formed a foundation for the mound. Soundlessly, they didn't flounder as the mounds they built grew higher and higher. Finally, the founders of the mounds knew their fears of failure were groundless.
