The governor wanted to use government aid to end poverty. He had seen so many slovenly hovels that he would have loved to have them torn down. It would be a good idea to build lovely homes for the poor.

However, the governor had to take off his gloves, and give the other branches of government a shove. Some of them had to take cover from the media who hovered around the state house. Those who were uncovered, shoveled lovely ideas to end poverty to the press. But, no one believed these comments from those in offices above. So, all the children of the state who loved to lessen the poverty of others, helped. They raised enough money with the governor to cover building lovely new homes to help end poverty.
