

Structured Language Experience Story “oy” #2

A queen named Joyce had a very bad case of poison ivy on the joints of her hands. The hot, moist weather made her hands itch. She tried to avoid getting her hands wet. A loyal royal employee washed all of the royal china. Her hands itched and itched. One night she fell asleep after an annoying day of constant itching. She began dreaming that the royal mice had all joined in the kitchen to make a special ointment to destroy the rash of the poison ivy. The mice mixed up cooking oil, soy, and several oysters. They covered it with foil and put it in the oven to broil. They put the ointment on the queen's hands. Imagine her joy when her hands were devoid of any poison ivy when she woke up the next morning!

