

Structured Language Experience Story “ur” #2

The nurse hurried purposefully to the nursery as the hurricane was approaching. There was a flurry of activity as the nurses prepared to stay in the nursery for the duration of the hurricane. They removed the curtains from the windows and purchased wood to cover the glass. Then nurse Ursula removed the curdled purple yogurt from the refrigerator and stocked it with extra water.

This flurry of activity was watched by the curious blurry eyes of the babies. Looking at the murky sky, there was nothing left for the nurses to do but nurture the gurgling infants and wait for the hurricane.

The afternoon went by as slowly as a turtle. But, when Ursula’s curiosity had her peeking out a door, she saw the hurricane announcing its arrival as a purple car flew over the curb. Hurrying back to the nursery, Ursula blurted out that the hurricane was here. The nurses gathered the babies and used their own bodies to form a curtain of protection. The duress of the next few hours was tiring. But fortunately, the nurses and the babies were not hurt in the hurricane.
